CZOP (Children as a Zone of Peace National Campaign) started in 2001 and made a loose coalition in 2003. This national campaign is a coalition of organizations working in the field of child rights (Children and schools as zones of peace) including CSOs, INGOs. The National Human Rights Commission and UNICEF Nepal are observer members. It has emerged as a movement that advocates for the protection and promotion of children's basic rights during and after armed-conflicts.

The CZOP campaign conceptualized and promoted the idea of children as a zone of peace as a general political agenda among political parties under the child rights and child protection. The campaign is mainly to refrain children from engaging and associating in party-led political movement both armed and unarmed, and to have responsive interventions of support and relief from civil society to the victims/surviving children affected by conflict during the armed conflict period. By the continued lobbying of CZOP and CSOs, major political parties included children are zones of peace and Child protection issues in their election manifestos. Policy and program advocacy is major area of CZOP for Child Protection, especially protection and development.

Among the various election campaign-related activities, the manifesto analysis of the election to the House of Representatives, 2082, is one of the major and important activities for making it as reference and record to assess how the political parties are sensitive towards the protection and promotion of child rights. CZOP submitted the appeal and recommendation letters to major political parties physically and all others registered party in election commission through email regarding the rights and issues of children to be incorporated in their election manifestos.
